I want to correct the word on this page. I suspect the organization made a mistake placing the name on the database (The university name is spelled incorrectly on the database. They are using New Mexico State University instead of New Mexico State University College of Law) The data entry software converts the words into the correct format. The database is an electronic version of the temporary paper form. We have uploaded the database to the web site as of March 21, 2016. It was up until then accessible as a download. A couple of days later, on April 2, 2016, we added a link to the file to the Description page.

The conversion was done with the portable Document Converter (portable link). The backup was also created with the Document

She had her husband go back to the store, get the strips for her, and try to figure out the right charge. He ended up sending the $27.50 back to Walgreens as a gift card. Gardiner was floored. "He said that he didn't feel right. He said, 'that's a lot of money for 12 nose strips,'" Gardiner recalled. "I was like, where does it end, when your face is your money?" On Monday, Gardiner found out how far that personal price tag extended. The Consumer Financial Protection Bureau and the federal government sued Walgreens for $27 million in an antitrust case that targets predatory, excessive, and deceptive pricing. The suit was announced just as Walgreens celebrates its 100th anniversary in the United States. It's the first time the bureau has taken on a major corporation, and it comes as a Wall Street Journal report details multiple instances of consumer complaints about excessive price hikes.
